

PRESS RELEASE

Jacques Delpla resigns as Visiting Fellow at Bruegel

Bruegel was created to promote research-based policy discussion. More than ever, the current situation calls for frank and innovative thinking. In recent times, Bruegel has not refrained from putting forward controversial proposals.

Audacity, however, does not go without intellectual discipline. As economists, we must be particularly careful when dealing with politics, history and ethics. We cannot and should not ignore them but we must exercise special restraint and avoid venturing into unsubstantiated value judgements.

In a recent interview, Visiting Fellow Jacques Delpla has found himself in infringement of these principles. He has consequently offered his resignation to Bruegel's director, who accepted it.

Jean Pisani-Ferry wishes to express his gratitude to Jacques for his contributions to Bruegel research.

About Bruegel:

Bruegel is a European think tank working in the field of international economics. Established in 2005, Bruegel is independent and non-doctrinal. It seeks to contribute to European and global economic policy-making through open, fact-based and policy-relevant research, analysis and debate. Bruegel's governance and funding model is unique. Its membership includes EU governments, leading international corporations, the EIB and the EBRD. Its activities are carried out at arm's length from members' interests.
