Dear friends and guests,

Welcome to the Bruegel Annual Meetings, our flagship event where we tackle key issues in European economic policy. This year marks a new chapter, with passing of the baton from Guntram, who finished his mandate, to Jeromin, who started as Director on 1 September 2022.

Over the course of two days, we will discuss the geostrategic position of Europe, the fiscal architecture of the EU in the wake of the pandemic and war in Ukraine, the energy and climate crises, financial literacy and many more important topics. We look forward to exchanging ideas and debating with you!

Sincerely,
Maria Demertzis, deputy Director
Guntram B. Wolff, former Director
Jeromin Zettelmeyer, Director

#BAM22 | BRUEGEL ANNUAL MEETINGS
How to minimize the damage caused by global fragmentation?

06 SEP - 08:30 CET
(Auditorium Albert II)

Over the past three decades, the flow of people and services, and technological innovation have contributed to stronger worldwide integration. The system has been far from perfect, with room for progress in areas of inequality, supply chain disruptions, climate change and debt. With the start of the war in Ukraine, new issues have arisen. The world is seeing a sweeping geoeconomic fragmentation, which needs to be tackled through building trust and resilience, solving debt and addressing climate change. In this conversation with the Managing Director of the IMF, Ms Kristalina Georgieva, we look at how to implement those solutions.
Geostrategic position of Europe at a critical moment

06 SEP - 09:15 CET

(Auditorium Albert II)

In February 2022, Europe was shaken by the start of the war in Ukraine. A huge tragedy for the Ukrainian people, it also triggered a series of redefining moments on the geopolitical stage. From two EU countries’ joining NATO, rising tensions in the US-China relationship and exploding energy crisis, the EU is again facing a crisis. Substantial sanctions have been agreed but energy sanctions remain incomplete. A reconsideration of dependencies to trade partners is crucial. In this panel, we look at Europe’s precarious and unique position and identify the key aspects for the path out of this new crisis.

Did the EU miss the Brexit opportunity in financial services?

06 SEP - 09:15 CET
(Galerie de Marbre)

In a 2017 paper, Bruegel scholars André Sapir, Dirk Schoenmaker and Nicolas Véron argued that the EU should take Brexit as an opportunity to accelerate its financial system integration agenda. Absent that, they identified a risk of further damaging fragmentation related to the shift of Europe’s main financial center from onshore (from an EU standpoint) to offshore. Five years on, the banking union remains unfinished, and progress towards a capital markets union has only been made on incremental initiatives. Panelists will take a step back, reflect on whether Brexit has been a missed opportunity, and debate the future policy options.
The fiscal architecture of the EU after pandemic and war

06 SEP - 10:45 CET
(Auditorium Albert II)

How do we maximise national ownership over fiscal decisions while maintaining EU-wide coordination and good incentives? With respect to control over the (composition of) spending, when is there a trade-off between national ownership and EU-wide efficiency, and how can these objectives be reconciled? With respect to the fiscal rules, how can the reduction of cross border debt risks be reconciled with room for national stabilization policy? Do we need smarter rules, better implementation, or both? What is the optimal division of labor between national fiscal frameworks and EU-level institutions?

The reception and integration of Ukrainian refugees in the EU

06 SEP - 10:45 CET
(Galerie de Marbre)

The fastest-growing humanitarian crisis since World War II forced millions to flee both within and outside Ukraine. By the summer, almost eight million Ukrainians arrived in the EU since the war started and half of them sought temporary protection, suggesting they might stay for a longer period. How can EU countries cope with the sudden arrival of so many people and provide accommodation, healthcare, protection from violence, and schooling for children? How can the integration of refugees, including labour market entry, be fostered? Is there a case for an EU-wide solidarity mechanism to help countries receiving the largest number of refugees?

Europe is in the midst of an unprecedented energy crisis. To avoid energy shortages in the coming months, all possible options are rightly being deployed – whether brown or green. Beyond the immediate crisis response, the Russian energy shock represents an opportunity for Europe to create a stronger continent-wide energy policy that will help accelerate its shift to green energy. As also outlined in the REPowerEU strategy, an accelerated deployment of clean energy solutions is the main avenue to structurally make Europe free of fossil-fuel dependency. This session will discuss what is and what should be done to make this happen.
European growth and the macroeconomy at a critical juncture

06 SEP - 12:15 CET

With inflation at a level unseen for 4 decades, growth slowing down quickly due to the energy crisis, supply bottlenecks due to Covid-19, a war at its doors, and political instability brewing in some countries, the European economy appears to be hit by a perfect storm. What will happen in the coming months and how should policymakers respond to this difficult and uncertain situation?
Building a more Sovereign Europe

06 SEP - 14:00 CET
(Auditorium Albert II)

A series of recent events have exposed Europe’s vulnerability to external shocks. France’s new State Minister for Europe, Laurence Boone will talk about the areas where Europe can increase self-reliance in order to build a more sovereign Europe. Some key fields are defence, trade, industrial and digital policy, as well as economic policy.

Automation and algorithms at work: managing the labour market impact of AI

06 SEP - 15:00 CET (Auditorium Albert II)

The effects of AI on labour market outcomes are shaped at two levels. First-order choices on the design of this new technology happen in the stage of R&D, which tends to focus excessively on automation and technologies that inefficiently drive down wages. Second-order choices on the adoption and implementation of AI in businesses – to the benefit or detriment of workers – take place inside organisations. In this session we discuss (1) how society can steer the R&D of AI in a labour-complementing and welfare-enhancing direction and (2) how businesses can responsibly implement these technologies in the workplace.
The future of the global trading system

06 SEP - 15:00 CET
(Galerie de Marbre)

The rise of China and other emerging economies, growing inequalities in advanced countries, the global financial crisis, the pandemic and now the war in Ukraine have led many to argue that global trade and the WTO’s multilateral trade rules are threats rather than opportunities. Is globalisation over? Will geopolitics trigger friend-shoring, protectionism and self-sufficiency? Will global trade rules be replaced by competing regional rules? Or will the international community succeed to rekindle the spirit of international cooperation and reshape WTO rules to achieve global goals such as the fight against climate change?
Ensuring investments into climate mitigation and the macroeconomic implications

06 SEP - 16:30 CET
(Auditorium Albert II)

As the news of record-breaking temperatures is pouring in from all over the world, we recognize that it is no longer a question of ‘if’ and ‘when’, and that governments need to step up and adapt to the fast-deteriorating climate situation. Climate change requires that both public and private capital is used to invest in green solutions and help build a sustainable world for everyone. What policies will be necessary to incite private investment? What economic trade-offs can we ensure for public investment? In general, what will be the macroeconomic implications of these instruments?

Growing Asian asymmetries in a polarized world

07 SEP - 09:00 CET
(Galerie de Marbre)

The pandemic and the war in Ukraine have accelerated decoupling forces between the US and China. Such forces have expanded from trade to finance and people-to-people. This has huge implications for the world but especially for Asia. Asian economies are coming out of the pandemic at different speeds and are reacting differently to such decoupling forces. The US is advancing its influence on Asia through a still-to-be-defined Indopacific Economic Framework while a Covid-stricken China is leveraging from its regional trade agreements in the region, especially RCEP. Europe’s strategy to benefit from Asia’s growth and size is yet to be fully defined. This panel will evaluate Asia’s economic situation in the light of these shocks and make proposals for a European economic strategy for Asia.

Digital technologies are associated with innovation and higher firm productivity. The EU’s lacklustre productivity growth is often related to its weaker performance in digital technology production and adoption. At the same time, ‘superstar’ firms advance technological evolution and exhibit star performance. These winners are usually “Big Tech” firms from the US, China, or Southeast Asia. If EU firms are unable to integrate new digital technologies into their business models, they will lose out.

What policies are needed? What challenges does the EU face? Are the current approaches (DMA, DSA, Chip Act, Green Deal, Missions, IPCEIs…) the right path?
The European Union is facing its worst energy crisis. A massive shortfall of energy supplies to Europe is meeting a fast recovery in demand after Covid. Energy prices exploded as a result. Governments so far mainly reacted by supporting consumers – through price caps or subsidies – so that they can maintain their consumption levels. As the global supply-demand imbalance only slowly recedes, the fiscal cost of these support measures is increasing already before the winter. In this session we will discuss what policies can mitigate the energy shock.
New European economic policy-making in the time of new crises

07 SEP - 13:00 CET
(Galerie de Marbre)

European economies are facing multiple challenges caused first by the pandemic and then the war in Ukraine. In this session Nadia Calviño, First Deputy Prime Minister of Spain and Minister for Economy and Digitalization, will explore how to tackle urgent issues such as rising inflation and the risk of imminent energy shocks, while continuing to work on longer-term challenges like the fiscal architecture of the EU and the digital and green transition.

Importance of financial literacy

07 SEP - 14:00 CET

(Auditorium Albert II)

Improving financial literacy is crucial, especially in the frame of the ongoing cost of living crisis. The people hit hardest by financial crises (low-income groups, women, young people and older people) are also the ones that score lower on financial knowledge. By empowering individuals to take the right financial decisions we can help them better navigate future crises.

In developing countries tackling climate change should not be framed in terms of reducing the carbon footprint. Instead, they need to grasp the growth opportunities provided by decarbonisation through the transformation of global production and trade patterns. Developing countries can help the global economy go green by using their natural resources instead of stunting their growth.
Closing keynote - The EU economic agenda going forward?

07 SEP - 15:00 CET
(Galerie de Marbre)

To close the Bruegel Annual Meetings, Paolo Gentiloni, European Commissioner for the Economy will map out the outlook for the European economy before delving into the state of play of the recovery and resilience plan and REPowerEU. Finally, he will discuss the review of the economic governance framework, a top priority for the next few months.

Notes
The building

Palais des Academies

The Palace was originally erected for Prince William of Orange, responding to the nation’s wish to pay tribute to the valiant conduct of the heir to the throne of the Netherlands during the Battle of Waterloo. It was occupied by the Prince of Orange and his wife Anna Pavlovna, until September 1830, when the Belgian Revolution heralded their return to the Netherlands. The building was sequestrated from October 1830 to December 1839.

During this period, a battalion of grenadiers occupied the stables and the public was allowed to visit the Palace. In November 1842, the building was transferred to the State and the Palace underwent major changes. Since 1848, the palace has had many roles, housing regiments, holding ceremonies and public festivals and storing collections of the Museum of Modern Art, before becoming the headquarters of the Royal Academy of Sciences, Letters and Fine Arts of Belgium and the Royal Academy of Medicine.
The Annual Meetings are Bruegel’s flagship event. They offer a mixture of large public debates and small private sessions about key issues in European and global economics. In a series of high-level discussions, Bruegel’s scholars, members and stakeholders will address the economic policy challenges facing Europe.

Bruegel is a European think tank specialising in economics. Established in 2005, Bruegel is independent and non-doctrinal. Its mission is to improve the quality of economic policy with open and evidence-based research, analysis and debate. Bruegel’s membership includes EU member state governments, international corporations and institutions.
